The NHS is a constant victim of scrutiny; politicians, press and public regularly voice their opinions on its successes and failures, meaning that separating ‘spin’ from fact is often next-to impossible. As the NHS reaches 65-years-old, should we be celebrating its achievements or mourning its mistakes? What is the current state of care in our hospitals? What will our health service look like in ten years’ time? National Health Issues explores all of these questions and more. The information comes from a wide range of sources and includes government reports and statistics, newspaper reports, features, magazine articles and surveys, literature from lobby groups and charitable organisations.
